PERSONAL -We were favored yester day with a call from Mr RALPH ROBINsox, editor of the Fairfield (lows) Ledger who is on a brief visit to friends in this city. Mr. Rominson was formerly in business here and has many old acquaintance here who will be glad to see him.

THE Congressional joke in Berkeley county turned out a serious one for the harmonious Democracy. The following is the vote as reported by the Statesman: Martin (Dem.) 753; Wisner (Rep.) 793, breler (Lud.) St. Laise (Rep.) 39. Wis-Boteler (Ind.) St. Laise (Rep.) 39. Wis-ner over Martin 49. Our Dear Friend, the Horse.

Our Dear Priend, the Horse(From the Chicago Tribune)

Human nature is so constituted that it does not thoroughly appreciate what it possesses until there is danger of losing it, and does not find out all its good qualities until it is torever gone. Graveyards attest the truth of this in memorial panetysric and monumental audicity. Our virtues seem to be made of such fugitive and intangible stuff that they entirely escape notice until the possessor dies, at which time they are first published to the world upon the marble pages of the cemeratery.—a volume seldom read, and more seldom believed when it is read. Constant use and familiarity engender constant use and familiarity engender constant use and familiarity engender constant abuse and contempt. Some people live together in marriage for many years, holding cat-and-dog relations to each other. Suddenly, one of them dies, where upon the survivor discovers that he or she has met with a great loss and no stand to the survivor discovers that he or she has met with a great loss and no stand to the survivor discovers that he or she has met with a great loss and no stand to the survivor discovers that he or she has met with a great loss and no stand to the survivor discovers that he or she has met with a great loss and no stand to stand the survivor discovers that he or she has met with a great loss and no stand the possesson to seal of the fighting and killing or scarring for like men, women and killing or scarring for like men, women and killing or scarring for like nen, women and killing upon the survivor discovers that he or Perhaps the most striking instance of brute creation has reason to complain, it is the horse. The cat has no greater troubles in its life than the danger of occasional bootjacks, which rarely if ever hit the mark. The dog's greatest sorrows grow out of the perverted use of tin ket ties by young children. The mule is of that heroic mould which scores pain, and guile hinder houf. The cow and the oxigile hinder houf. The cow and the oxigile hinder houf. The cow and the oxigile hinder houf. The cow and the ox Telegraph tells his readers this week what he knows about hogs. He confines his daily live, is the victim of frequent maltreatment. Any sort of stabiling is good enough for him. No amount of work is too heavy. Shoe-pegs and oat-husks will do for his eating, and if, under such circumstances, he stackens in his work from tatigue or bad temper, the next thing in order is to best him unmercially. He must neither expect favor, mercy, or rest, but drudge along uncomplainingly, until he is incospaciated for further work, and then he is turned out so die, perhaps of

The horse-disease, however, has made its appearance, and suddenly every horse owner who has been accustomed to abuse his animal, now that there is a prospect of losing him, discovers that he is a dear riend, a noble creature, deserving of the kindest consideration and most touching care. It is painfully indicrous, the amount of pity and the tenderness of treatment which is now bestowed upon him. Street car companies, which have used their horses as if they were made out of cast from, which have put them under the rein and whip of stupid and cruel drivers, which have overworked them to twice the amount of labor of which they are capable, are now absolutely overwhelming in the delicacy of their attentions. A horse of ordinary appreciation must be filled with astonishment to find a first-class breakfast set before him instead of his customary indigestible mess; a day's work proportionate to his strength, with an opportunity to rest; blankets provided for him that he may not take cold; and, at hight, a polatable supper, a clean stall, and plenty of fresh water and pure air. As nothing is the matter A FIRE occurred Tuesday morning in and pure an. As nonning is the tanwith the horse at present, and as he cannot be aware that the atmosphere is threatening him with catarth, one can easily imagine the anxiety he must leel at this alarming change in his treatment.

(Richmond correspondence of N. Y. Post Some weeks ago a servant in the Capt-As Old Acquaintance is a New Dress.

Some person who appears to unite the qualities of fool and knave about equally, tometime ago wrote a letter to the which resulted in the starting discount. Charleston Courser suggesting that Old Virginia could get rid of her debt by obtaining admission into the new State, a county at a time, after the fashion of Jerlerson and Berkl-y, by consent of the legislatures of Virginia and West Virginia. Here is the way the gentleman amplifies the idea:

"Thus the present Virginia can gralually be merged into West Virginia It is well known that the latter corporation of the design will be merged into West Virginia It is well known that the latter corporation of the design will be merged into West Virginia It is well known that the latter corporation descans any responsibility for the doings.

Thus the fiscing near Houded's stature had sunk several inches. Further investigation to the supported the such a time that the supported the first was seriously cracked. The stature of the legislature as to its future disposition. The fisor beneath it and even the heavy rafters were found dry-rotted to such a degree that the wood crumbiled beneath the fingers as easily as so much dry carth. The settling and cracking of the arch, in the besement after so many responsibility for the doings.

government need then be supported; when as now we are burdened with two. The firegular outline of our present limits, as shown by the map of West Virginia, at once prompts the desire for more territory, even for the sake of symmetry."

When Parson Brownlow was invited to join the secession movement, he replied that when he wanted to go to hell he should not go by way of the Southern Confederacy. Two propositions are made here. One is to reunite the two States and the other to repudiate their debt. If either or both these things are to be done, we don't see why we should go round Robin Hood's barn to accomplish it. We suggest, however, that before practical steps in this direction are taken this winter at Charleston, it might be well to consider the fact that the consent of Congress would be as essential to the proposed.

When It was not a precisial to the proposed.

When It was the corner described above, was so marred by shadows as to be practically worthless. Taken in a proper light, such a photograph of the statuse is six feet two inches.

What will be done with the status of the constant of the proposed.

would be as essential to the proposed absorption and extinction of Virginia as that of the Legislatures. No two States can change their boundary, transfer territory, or enter into any other arrangement, except by permission of Congress.

Of course, both Virginia and West Virginia, or either, may repudiate their obligations without persistence without persistence without persistence of the Governor into a building as nearly differenced as it could be made, and to place in it the books, etc., appertaining to the gains, or either, may repudiate their obtigations without restraint or remedy from Congress or elsewhere; but they cannot effect it in the particular manner saggested without formal consent of Congress, every time a slice of territory is to be transferred.

Interproof as it could be made, and to place in it the books, etc., appertaining to the State library, and appropriating a certain space for the reception of the Houdon status, and other works of art now on aband or hereafter to be accumulated. Straitened as the State is for money, this is, perhaps, the best disposition that could be made of the statue.

In Ohio the coalition vote was about she has met with a great loss, and no mouning is black enough to symbolize the overpowering grief for the beloved defanct, who, when alive, had no appreciable value, either financial, connubial, or total coalition vote was near 190,000, of which it is estimated that the Liberal Republicans furnished about 8 000.
